Dasrath Manjhi, 31 years old, set out to carve a 1 km long path through a rocky hillside. He wanted life to be easier for his fellow villagers. The hill kept the villages in isolation. They took hours just to reach the nearest market town. Children had to walk eight km to reach school.

He was a man who built a road through the mountain. He did it by his own efforts, his drive and his indomitable determination. Not expecting rewards of any sort he did it using the simplest of tools – a chisel, rope and a hammer.

What empowered a single man to accomplish such an enormous task was his beloved wife, who died since she could not reach the hospital on time.

Though most villagers taunted and ridiculed him, Dasrath taught us that patience is the greatest virtue that leads to success.
